The Down Factory Store

www.downfactorystore.com

Thanks to our retail and "online" customers we are one of the largest resources for goose down comforters, pillows and featherbeds. Consumers that compare our quality and prices to those of department stores, discounters, catalogs and other web sites find that we are indeed unbeatable - and we guarantee that! Know the facts of down before you buy.

FACT: Down comes from the chest of the bird to keep it insulated from the weather. Feathers (those things with quills) come from the back of the bird to keep it dry. Down can cost as much as $10.00 an ounce, feathers 10¢ an ounce. Over 90% of down manufacturers find it to their advantage to add over 30% feathers to their down. It's like buying three pounds of ground sirloin and getting two pounds of meat and one pound of fat. You have paid for meat and got fat, it's the same with their down, they both do it because it's legal. We do not contaminate our down by adding feathers to it.

KNOW THE FACTS BEFORE YOU BUY IT

FACT: Fill power, this is the amount the cubic inches filled by one ounce of down. Higher fill power means a higher quality down. You will find that as the quality of the down increases, so does the comfort & life of the item.

FACT: We use only high thread count, baffle box construction, 100% cotton covers on our down comforters & pillows. Down insulates by trapping air and holding in your body temperature, keeping you comfortable through the night. Low quality comforters are usually heavier because it takes more of an inferior down to fill a comforter. Inferior down becomes clumpy and it can't breath, resulting in your becoming over heated and uncomfortable. Our high quality down gives you the warmth and comfort without the weight.

FACT: In all likelihood you will have your comforter longer than the car you are now driving.

"We go the distance for you."

Going 46 mph In A 30 mph Zone Gives The Hamptons Council Ideas

By Dan Rattiner

The monthly meeting of the Hamptons Council was held last Friday evening in Southampton and nearly the entire time was taken up discussing traffic and parking problems. Parking in East Hampton, on weekends, even during the week, is almost impossible to find downtown this winter. There was some discussion about the two-hour maximum ticket dispensing machines, which were at the entrances to all the parking lots during the summertime. Perhaps they should be put in place during the off season as well in that town. There was also talk about using that system in Southampton, Westhampton Beach and Bridgehampton. Tom Delburger volunteered to look into the matter.

The most interesting topic discussed at the meeting, however, involved a newspaper article that appeared in Newsday last week. A man had gotten a speeding ticket. The fine for the offense, determined by a judge, was $103,000.

"This is a whole new way of looking at traffic violations," said Wallace Bartlow, who had brought in the article.

This record fine for speeding was levied in a courtroom in Helsinki, Finland against a Nokia executive named Anssa Vajoki. It was not that he was speeding particularly excessively. He was only clocked going 46 miles an hour in a 30 mile an hour zone. It was that he was rich.

Bartlow read the article aloud.

"In Finland, traffic fines are not based solely on the seriousness of the infringement, they're also tied to the offender's income, and there's no limit. Worse for Vanjoki, his fine was based on his net income in 1999, when he reportedly made $5.2 million because of options sales.

"Vanjoki made $5.2 million in 1999, but only $970,000 in 2000. But the city was basing the fine on his 1999 numbers because the 2000 numbers hadn't yet been posted," Bartlow said.

There was a long silence after that.

"How much would the fine have been at $970,000?" somebody asked.

"I don't know," Bartlow said.

A spirited discussion followed the reading of this article. Some people said there was considerable merit in this system. What would some rich person care about paying a $75 fine for speeding? They'd care a whole lot if they had to pay $75,000.

Nelson "Hop" Davers, the President of the Council, said he agreed with this argument. Each according to his own, he said. But how would they be able to determine the income of a person in America

$103,000 Speed Trap

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Helsinki — At 46 mph, he didn't set any land-speed records, but Nokia executive Anssa Vanjoki could set the record for the costliest ever speeding ticket — a $103,000 fine.

Vanjoki, 45, is fighting to get the fine reduced. He was slapped with the ticket for speeding on a motorcycle in a 31-mph zone on an island near Helsinki last October. In Finland, traffic fines are not based solely on the seriousness of the infringement, they're also tied to the offender's income, and there's no limit. Worse for Vanjoki, his fine was based on his net income in

Can Martha Stewart of East Hampton afford to lose $1.7 billion? We'll soon see. That's the amount of money people pay to buy her stuff at Kmart, which has just gone bankrupt, taking the deal they have with Martha down the drain. But Martha, we predict, will bounce back. We'll find her stuff somewhere else.

without it being an invasion of privacy? It might be okay in Finland. But what about America? He did think the Council could get the information, however. They could hook up with the State of New York or the IRS. But would that be legal?

"Maybe we could require everyone to submit their last year's income tax return at a booth at the Shinnecock Canal," Terrence Austin-Boyd said to much laughter.

"I think many of our summer people would LIKE that," Bartlow replied.

The discussion proceeded apace to a time, about ten years ago, when a departing weekender left his summer house on a Sunday when the dump was closed, took all the trash with him in plastic bags in the back of his Mercedes and left it in the dumpster owned by the Wainscott Antique Shop on the Montauk Highway. The next morning, the angry antique shop owner saw all the trash, took it out of the dumpster, went through it and, among other things, discovered what was apparently the perpetrator's federal income tax return. He turned it over to a local newspaper, Dan's Papers he thought it was, which published it. The man was a well-to-do stockbroker who had made about $400,000 that year, which was quite a lot at that time. It was also quite an embarrassment.

The group got quite a laugh over that.

"Maybe it would be easier," Constance Vallone said, "to just give out tickets to very expensive cars. If a ten-year-old Toyota double parks, just give a warning. If it's a one-year-old BMW 740iL, sock it to 'em."

Another fifteen minutes was taken up discussing the habits of some very eccentric rich people, who might drive around in ten-year-old Geo Metros with the mufflers falling off just to avoid getting tickets. This could make the Hamptons look very shabby, someone said. Someone else brought up the habits of Howard Hughes, perhaps the most famous eccentric billionaire who didn't even go out of his penthouse apartment. He let his nails grow four inches long.

"What's this got to do with anything?" Hop Davers said, banging his gavel.

In the end, it was voted to get advice from the Council attorney about whether it was legal to use a man's tax return as the basis for a fine for a traffic ticket. The matter was unanimously approved and the Council attorney asked to get back with an answer within two weeks.Then the meeting was adjourned and everyone invited down to the Driver's Seat Restaurant for a drink. •

Curse Of The Commons

No One Has Been Able To Break The Hex Put On This Part Of Bridgehampton

By Dan Rattiner

There is a piece of ground in Bridgehampton that is cursed, if recent events are any indication. This ground is just under three-quarters of an acre in size, is located about an eighth of a mile north of Montauk Highway and is part of the eastern end of the largest shopping center in the Hamptons, Bridgehampton Commons. It is also, currently, home to a branch of the huge department store chain known as KMart. I say currently because, as was announced on Tuesday, KMart has gone into bankruptcy. My hunch about the curse was correct.

Here is the recent history of this patch of ground, going back one quarter of a century.

In 1976, the shopping center opened. There were many stores in it, practically all of which are still there today, including Radio Shack and McNamara's Liquor Store. The largest store, and the seventh wonder of the world as far as we East Enders were concerned, was called Woolco. We had all heard of big shopping center department stores. We had been to them. (This was a long time ago.) We had all heard of Woolco. They had stores all over the country, about 2000 of them, and they were a big success. I guess they were doing about $30 billion worth of business and making lots of money. We were delighted to have them. People flocked to the grand opening. Inside, occupying every inch of this three-quarters of an acre of space, was everything you might ever want to buy at low, low prices. There were clothes, stereos, furniture, canned goods, toys, a garden department, even a hardware section and another section for outdoor furniture. A friend of mine, as a special treat for her two twin daughters, age nine at the time, sent them in with ten dollars each. They came out with two gerbils and two sets of pierced ears. Woolco was a fabulous place to get just about anything at shopping center prices, just like the bigger shopping centers "up the island."

Caldor's opened in 1988. Eight years later, the chain was a shambles of red ink and worthless paper.

Six years later, however, in a financial crash heard round the world, Woolco went belly up. Not OUR Woolco. Everybody at our Woolco in Bridgehampton told us they were doing a land office business, they were one of the top units in the chain. What went belly-up was the entire CHAIN of stores called Woolco, and that included ours, which had a one-week fire sale and then closed its doors. Nationwide, about 80,000 people lost their jobs, about forty billion dollars worth of stock was wiped out, and the big Woolco sign was removed and taken to the Sag Harbor dump.

Less than a year later, however, toward the end of 1982, there was a new tenant in the space. This was Grant City, another nationwide department store giant, which had, I believe, over 1,000 stores around the nation. Grant City brought in all new merchandise, re-modeled and re-painted the interior and seemed to us, anyway, to be an even better merchant than Woolco. They were in great financial health. But that didn't help when, in 1987, just six years later, the entire nationwide corporation suddenly collapsed into bankruptcy.

This happened even though we had been told that the Grant City in Bridgehampton was one of the top grossing retail units in the chain. Once again, there was a one-week fire sale. And once again, our big store in the Bridgehampton Commons closed its doors.

Who would take over this space? WalMart? The Price Club? There were rumors it might become a Macy's. But no. Just two months after Grant City went down in a sea of bills, signs went up in the windows that it would become a Caldor's.

This was the best possible news imaginable. Caldor's, in the late 1980s, was a chain of about 50 stores, located mostly in the New York metropolitan area, with a reputation for low prices, friendly service and aggressive marketing. They were family-owned. And if they weren't doing ten billion dollars worth of business when they opened here, there was no doubt in our minds, anyway, that they very soon would. The business was healthy, the chain was growing and, among other things, the family that owned the chain was known for its charitable work. It would be a pleasure to shop at Caldor's.

Caldor's opened in 1988. Eight years later, the chain was a shambles of red ink and worthless paper. In spite of the fact that we had been told by the manager in Bridgehampton that his Caldor's was one of the top retailers in the chain, when the chain went bankrupt later that year, our Caldor's went with it.

Thus began, in 1996, one of the worst periods imaginable for the residents of the Hamptons. Around this huge, abandoned space, Radio Shack, the Gap, Banana Republic and King Kullen thrived. Even McNamara's Liquors did a rip-roaring business. They are still doing a rip-roaring business today. But beginning in 1996 and lasting for a year and a half, nothing opened in the giant, regional department store space for any of us local people to go to. Just to get staples at reasonable prices, we had to go "up the island" to Lake Grove, where there is a huge shopping center, big Smith Haven Mall, nearly an hour away. We wrote lists of what we needed and saved up. It was a big all-day trip that would consume half a tank of gas. These were terrible times.

Finally, in 1998, the biggest, strongest chain of all, KMart, opened in Bridgehampton. Here was an outfit that, nationwide, was the second largest retailer in America. There were 2,100 stores. They were doing $35 billion worth of business a year and making a billion dollars in profit. They employed 252,000 people. At long last, we were getting an outfit that, finally, could run a department store right. And we could count on them being there for a long, long time.

Wrong. KMart's fortunes began to turn, according to the experts, almost the very year they opened in Bridgehampton. Just two years later, in 2000, they posted their last profitable quarter. From there, they sank like a stone.

This past week, the stock, which had been trading at $13 just five months ago, was down to 70 cents, after which, trading stopped. After posting a $150 million loss in the third quarter of 2001, there were rumors it might open up to $200 million in losses in the fourth quarter. There was a mad and unsuccessful scramble for additional financing, a supplier that stopped shipping to them, the firing of their president and chairman, "Chuck" Conaway, and the hiring of a new president and chairman, bankruptcy expert James Adamson. Finally, there was Chapter 11.

Once again, everybody else in the mall, all the other managers, will be out on the sidewalk shaking their heads as they take the big KMart sign down. The curse will have struck again.

As for me, I feel that before the next victim, er, tenant moves in, we should send a shaman in there with a stick with bristles on the end. He could walk up and down, dipping this stick into spider blood and shaking it all over. A friend of mine thinks they ought to send a feng shui expert inside. But I don't think that will accomplish much. They'll just recommend to the next tenant that the aisles be turned sideways and the entrance be in the back instead of the front.

Some say the looming demise of the KMart chain is not because they opened a unit here in Bridgehampton, but because they went head to head with WalMart, the country's largest retailer. Nobody can go up against WalMart, and win. Well, they're wrong about that. It's the curse of the Bridgehampton Commons.

Come to Bridgehampton, WalMart. Or maybe Target. Out there somewhere there is a department store chain strong enough and big enough to break the Curse. It has to be one of you. We will welcome you with open arms and open wallets. We want never again to have to drive all the way to Smith Haven Mall. Even if we have to bankrupt every retail chain in America. •

The Earth Will Not Burn Up In A Billion Years As Previously Thought

By Dan Rattiner

There has been some absolutely wonderful news in the world of science these past few days. You know how, about twenty years ago, scientists came up with a scenario about the end of the world? No? Well, this is how it went. About 7.5 billion years from now, the nuclear fire that is raging on our sun is going to begin to burn out. As it does, the sun is going to swell and enlarge, apparently for some obscure chemical reason, to try to find more stuff in the galaxy to use as firewood. It will grow and consume the closest planet, Mercury. Then it will grow and consume the second closest planet, Venus. Finally, as it flickers and begins to die, it will grow and consume the third planet. That's us. After that, it will fizzle. It will spare Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune and Pluto. But as for the first three planets, too bad.

The depressing part of this, of course, is where it consumes the third planet. I have a lot I have been saving here. Photographs of my great grandparents. My high school yearbook. The plaque I won for finishing second in a classical piano competition in Newark, New Jersey, when I was eight-years old. All of this stuff is up in the attic. I suspect you have a lot of similar stuff in your attic, too.

Well, now it turns out that a mathematical error was made twenty years ago when scientists worked out this scenario. Astronomers at Sussex University in England found it. The error involves some calculations about the loss of mass that occurs as the sun expands. They forgot to adequately account for the weakening gravity that will accompany that situation.

After another few billion years, and I imagine the sun snarling and snapping at us during this time, the sun will simply implode.

In the new calculations, the sun expands and gobbles up Mercury, then Venus, then, just when it is about to gobble up Earth, its fire becomes so weak it just cannot do so. It tries. But it just sort of holds its own there in the sky, about 120 times bigger than it is now. On the other hand, with its weakened gravity, Earth, though continuing to circle the sun, will be pushed into a farther-out orbit by centrifugal force. It will be about 25% farther away than it is now, and it will survive. Finally, after another few billion years, and I imagine the sun snarling and snapping at us during this time, the sun will simply implode. It will shrivel up and with one final shriek, turn into a black hole. Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune and Pluto, sort of a rump solar system, will survive, although without a sun. On the other hand, given all the time we have from now until then, we ought to be able to work out how to heat and light the earth using new technology. Probably heat and light the other planets, too, for which we could charge them a pretty penny.

The scientists in Sussex are pretty jubilant about this finding — or they should be, anyway. We all should. It means things aren't so bad after all.

Another piece of scientific news, which was released just days after the Sussex discovery, is that, for the first time, astronomers have photographed a planet in a different solar system. Up until now, we have deduced the existence of planets in other solar systems by the pull of gravity they exert on immediate neighbors, but to actually photograph one, well, this is another cause for celebration.

I don't have all the details about this yet — I saw it on FOX 5 on the morning news — but the anchor person was interviewing their science reporter in Washington, a man with a close cropped beard, and he was saying that they have photographed this planet, which is in a category called a Brown Dwarf, from the Hubble Telescope. It is very big for a planet, about twelve times the mass of our entire solar system, but it is orbiting a star, has no source of heat of its own, which is how you define a planet, and it is 58 light years away. This means that what we are seeing today through the Hubble Telescope — and they had a picture of it there on TV — took place in 1944 our time, which is the year that the Allied Forces, under Eisenhower, landed at Normandy and began to roll up the Nazis, and one year before we dropped the atomic bomb on Hiroshima.

One hopes they aren't having that sort of trouble on the Brown Dwarf. But if they dropped an A-bomb there back then, we should see it next August.

If all of the above is good news, there has been one piece of bad news, or sort of bad news, in the world of science, and that came yesterday.

The bad news is, or was, that three weeks ago scientists discovered a huge asteroid heading right in our direction, just two and a half weeks away. They kept it pretty hush hush I guess because I never heard about this — maybe they didn't want to panic anybody — but yesterday, they reported that the asteroid passed us by, missing earth by just 120,000 miles, which is less than half the distance from here to the moon.

This was a very close call. I heard about it during the same conversation on FOX 5 where a few minutes earlier they were talking about the Brown Dwarf, and the anchor wanted to know a lot more about it.

"How big was this asteroid?" he asked.

"About a thousand feet long," the man with the beard said.

"If it had hit us, could it have caused a lot of damage?"

"It was big enough to wipe out a small country. An astronomer in England said it was big enough to wipe out France."

"I suppose if it were a French astronomer, he would have said it was big enough to wipe out England," the anchor said.

Ha. Ha.

"It's disturbing we only knew about this two and a half weeks in advance," the anchor said. "Anyway, if it were on a direct collision course with Earth, what could we have done about it? I mean, I've seen the movie."

"Not much," the man with the beard said. "The technology we could use to deflect something like that is twenty, maybe thirty years away. It wouldn't have made any difference."

Well, I guess it's like anything else. You buy a Volvo, which should be okay for 200,000 miles. But then you could get in an accident, totaling the car just a week after you buy it.

So what it comes down to is if we stay lucky, we won't get hit by an asteroid and eventually we should be able to figure out how to heat and light this place once the sun burns out. And if we don't we can move to the Brown Dwarf.

Any new developments, I'll let you know. •

Bull Shot Dead

A half ton bull that escaped from his pasture and has been sauntering around Riverhead for the last three months was finally dispatched on Thursday in a farm field in Calverton owned by farmer Walter Hodun. Hodun's wife butchered the animal, his pieces were put into a freezer, and the family says they intend to have him for dinner, for maybe the next three months.

The bull was never reported missing and nobody is completely sure which farm he came from, but he was a beautiful animal, a Texas Longhorn, with horns about a foot and a half long. During the past month he has been reported walking along the beach in Wading River, grazing on the fairway at the Fox Hill Country Club, and strolling out onto the Riverhead Raceway. Each time, police gave chase, but he eluded them. He was last seen on West Main Street in Riverhead, tying up traffic. The police followed him off the road in a squad car, then down the railroad tracks and into the woods where they lost him.

Harassment

In America, A Man Should Not Be Driven From His Home For A Zoning Violation

By Dan Rattiner

This is the fourth week in the last seven that I have written about the trials of a man named Gines Serran-Pagan, a Spaniard by birth, who four years ago bought the remains of a farm, a farmhouse and barn on one acre in Southampton, New York. Before buying this property, which had been used as office space for a construction company for the past fifty years, Serran-Pagan asked the Village Building Department if it would be okay if he moved there and brought in various chickens, ducks, goats and geese and restored the old farm a bit. He was told it was alright, there were no laws against it, and so he did.

The reason I have been so interested in this is not because of Spaniards and animals. I am so interested in this because I think a man who abides by the law should be allowed to live in peace and not be harassed by the mayor of the village, who has at his command the police, the zoning enforcement officials, the health enforcement officials and the fire department officials.

Fifteen months ago, after getting himself elected Mayor, Joe Romanosky, who is otherwise a math teacher in one of the local schools, got an earful of complaints from his father-in-law, Alex Gadomski, who lives next door to Mr. Serran-Pagan. People complain about their neighbors all the time. There are things you can do about it and things you can't. Mayor Romanosky's view seems to have been that if this man was bothering his father in law, then he would run him out of town.

Police, zoning and health officials have been all over the Serran-Pagan property during this past year. They have issued one summons after another, sometimes apologizing to Serran-Pagan as they gave them to him. The local judges repeatedly threw out the cases.

Police, zoning and health officials have been all over the Serran-Pagan property during this past year. They have issued one summons after another... The local judges repeatedly threw out the cases.

As you might imagine, whatever problem Serran-Pagan was having with his neighbor very quickly extended out to the neighbor's son-in-law, the mayor. Serran-Pagan faced him with absolutely no weapons at his command except for the fact that he was a taxpayer. The mayor, stymied by the existing laws, had his lawyers write new laws making it illegal for a person in Southampton Village to have farm animals on his property, unless he had at least an acre and a half of property and then only by getting a license, renewable annually, with the mayor's specific permission. This, in a community where everyone

The Story Of An Amazing Montauk Indian Living On The South Fork

By Joshua May

Little more than legends remain of the remarkable accomplishments of Montaukett Indian Stephen "Talkhouse" Pharaoh. A photograph, taken in 1867, shows Pharaoh as an enigmatic and iconic figure who moved one writer, Steve Wick, author of Heaven and Earth — an historical account of North Fork farming — to call him "the embodiment of everything that ever was Long Island and everything that would never be again." Even though Pharaoh was a firsthand witness to events that shaped the 19th century — the whaling industry, the California Gold Rush, P. T. Barnum's shows and the Civil War — little is known about the man and the extraordinary life he led.

His story begins nearly 200 years before his birth with the story of his progenitor, the great Montaukett Chief, Wyandanch. When the first European settlers reached Long Island shores, Wyandanch was one of the first Native Americans they befriended. He was an influential leader among the tribes and played a significant, albeit tragic, role in the history of Long Island.

Whether it was a misunderstanding of what the presence of European settlers signified to his people, a belief that he was acting in the best interest of local tribes or any combination of factors, Wyandanch set in motion events that were typical of those played out at that time across the continent as Europeans displaced Native Americans. First, he began to slowly sell off land. As small transactions led to larger ones — fueled by a healthy dose of deception and deceit on the part of the settlers — by the time Stephen Pharaoh was born in 1819, most of Long Island was owned by the Europeans. When Pharaoh died in 1879, all of the lands owned by the once great Montauketts would be gone.

Pharaoh was born in a wigwam at Molly Hill (so named for his mother) in Springs, East Hampton, on land that was owned by settlers who had never used or lived on the property. This was a typical arrangement in those days because it provided the townspeople with cheap, unskilled labor near at hand. At a young, though undetermined age, Pharaoh was sold as an indentured servant to Col. William Parsons of Fireplace for forty dollars — one dollar per pound. In exchange for his labor, Pharaoh would receive room and board until the age of sixteen when he would be released from his servitude. Apparently the arrangements didn't suit the young man because, at the age of thirteen, he headed off to Sag Harbor and got himself a berth on a whaling ship.

Pharaoh was employed by P.T. Barnum, who billed him as "The World's Greatest Walker" and "The Last King of the Montauketts."

In 1832, the whaling industry had made Sag Harbor one of the most important ports in all of America. Historian Robert Keene noted, "In 1843, a History of New York State was published. In the Long Island section it says there were only two places of any importance — Brooklyn on the West End and Sag Harbor on the East End." The village, a bustling microcosm of the world, boasted streets along which Africans mingled with Native Americans, Irish with Indonesians.

As Herman Melville noted in Moby Dick, the racial attitudes that so prominently shaped American society were subverted by the profit-driven whaling industry that needed able-bodied men, regardless of their race. It's likely that Pharaoh found himself aboard a ship among a mixed company of men headed south around Cape Horn into the fertile hunting grounds of the South Pacific.

In those times a whaling voyage would last as long as five or six years, the final sail home dictated not by the calendar, but by a hold full of oil. It's unknown if Pharaoh returned to Long Island during this time as there is no record of his whereabouts until 1849 when he, and incidentally most of the ships in Sag Harbor's whaling fleet, ended up in San Francisco.

On January 24, 1848, James Marshall was one of about twenty men building a sawmill on the American River in northern California. At the time, California was little more than a distant outpost and the port that would become San Francisco was home to only a few hundred residents. As Marshall worked in the river, a glint caught his eye and it wasn't long before the California Gold Rush was in full swing. There is nothing known about Pharaoh's time in California, except that he was there, a free-spirited young whaler spending time panning for gold.

Where Pharaoh might have gone after California is unclear, though there are reports that he may have stopped in Wisconsin where members of the Montaukett tribe had relocated after being forced from their homes on Long Island. The next chapter in Pharaoh's life seems to be the time he spent serving in the Union Army as a member of the 29th Connecticut Volunteers.

The 29th was an all-black unit and during the Civil War it was customary for blacks and Native Americans to serve together. Addie Brown of Hartford recounts the return of the 29th in November, 1866 to her friend Rebecca Primus, a young black woman, who had traveled to the South to teach emancipated slaves. "The troops were greeted by government officials and honored with speeches, a parade and ceremonial dinner." In any case, Pharaoh was back on Long Island where he had his picture taken in 1867.

The photograph that I. G. Van Scoy took is one of the most enduring and haunting images that comes from the Talkhouse legacy. Sitting with legs crossed, his left hand across his lap, a walking stick in his right hand, the picture seems to profess a strange sadness and an odd mixture of defeat and defiance. There is the contrast of the slender figure, the shoulder-length black hair and the inscrutable eyes that subvert his contemporary clothing. There is also an air of honor and nobility about the man that seems intrinsic.

Dr. A. Huntington, who knew Pharaoh as a boy, described him as "tall, lithe and commanding. As quick as a squirrel and as light of foot as a cat, with a low-pitched musical voice, but a man of few words... I have known him to walk forty miles and do a day's labor, inside twenty-four hours, more than once."

Indeed, it was the walking that propelled Pharaoh to fame. He was well-known around the East End as the man to talk to when you needed a letter delivered — he would walk twenty-five miles for twenty-five cents. It is rumored that he once refused a ride in the lighthouse keeper's carriage, which was drawn by a fast team of horses, because he was in a hurry to get to town. Perhaps most sensational, it is said he could walk from East Hampton to Brooklyn — a distance of 140 miles — in a day. Around the East End there are a number of trails he walked and Lee Dion, a member of the East Hampton Trails Preservation Society, regularly leads walks through Hither Woods to the site of Pharaoh's old home, now no more than a hole in the ground surrounded by rocks. Lee knows a great deal about Pharaoh and it's an enjoyable hike. (And not to fear, his pace is not Pharaohesque.)

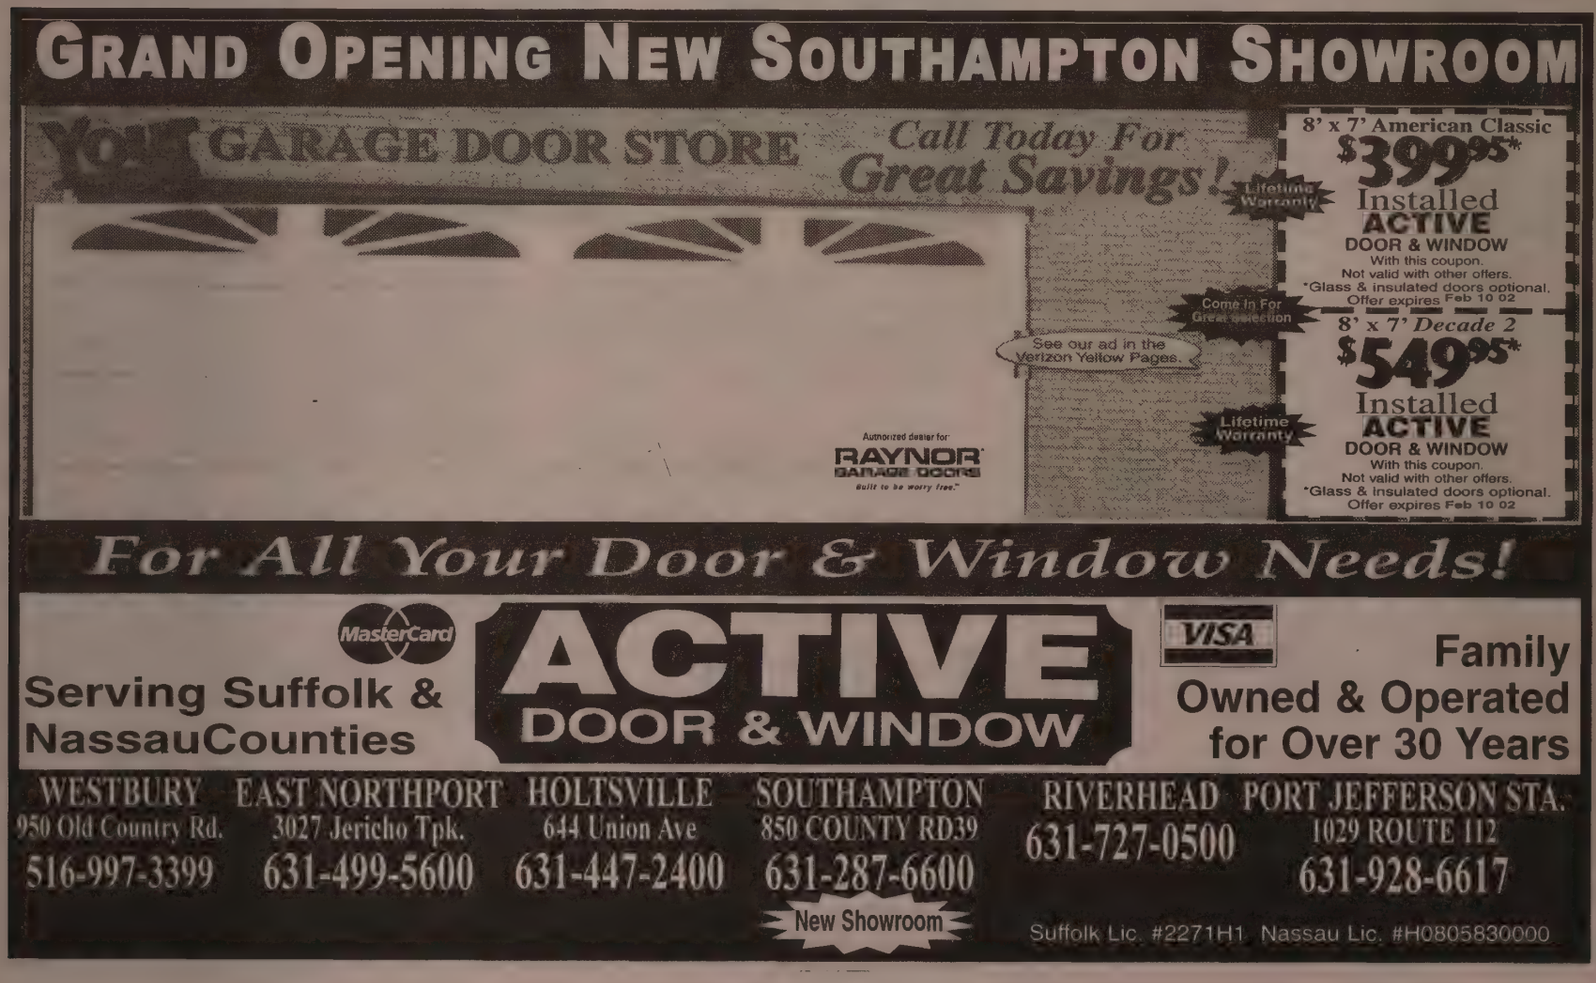
Whether it was these pedestrian feats or the fact that Pharaoh was one of the few remaining, and probably most well-known, Montauketts, P. T. Barnum hired him to appear in his shows. Barnum, often called the "Greatest Showman on Earth," could accurately be described as a genius of advertising, exploitation and caterer to the human predilection for voyeurism.

Barnum's career was launched when he purchased an old slave woman named Joice Heth, who claimed she was 161-years-old and had been George Washington's nanny. Barnum, and any other individual of sound mind, knew this was not the case, yet he saw the potential entertainment value with the right publicity. He started a sensational advertising campaign and was soon turning incredible profits displaying the old woman. When public interest began to wane, he wrote an anonymous letter to a city newspaper claiming the woman was in fact a machine and thus sparked a renewed demand. Such were the tactics he employed and credo he lived by — "There's a sucker born every minute."

Somehow Pharaoh was employed by Barnum, who billed him as "The World's Greatest Walker" and "The Last King of the Montauketts." Lee Dion explained that, in addition to the entrance fees Barnum charged, he would stage events for his patrons to bet on. Pharaoh would race a quarter mile against horses pulling wagons. "Sometimes he would win, sometimes he would lose," said Dion. In the long distance division, there is a story that Pharaoh won a walking race from Boston to Chicago against fifty other people when he was fifty-nine. It's unknown if Barnum had a hand in arranging the race, but it seems to bear the showman's mark. This race was probably one of the last events that Pharaoh participated in because, by 1878, he was back on Long Island and in court at his brother David's side.

The brothers were in court fighting against the settlers for the property rights to Indian Fields (in Montauk near Hither Woods) and it was a losing battle. David died in 1878 of consumption, the 19th century term for tuberculosis. Only a year later Stephen Pharaoh died of the same disease while out walking on the trails he loved so dearly. A short time after his death, Arthur Benson purchased Montauk in an auction for $151,000. He ordered all the Indians off of his newly acquired land and he bribed those who were slow to go, sending them west to Wisconsin. And thus ended the sad saga of the Montauketts in their homeland on Long Island. Today, a handful of the tribe remains and they are fighting for recognition and their rights.

While Stephen "Talkhouse" Pharaoh is a prominent symbol for remaining Montauketts, he is still very much a mystery. We don't even know how he came to be called "Talkhouse." •



The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Observations of an Islander # 184
Christmas Closet Cleanout Spectacular

Well, it's happening now, everywhere across this great Island of ours, women are standing in front of closets, looking down at all the new Christmas stuff piled high at their feet, putting their hands on their hips and asking out loud, "Where am I gonna put all that?"

Closets everywhere are being emptied, pruned and re-stacked in order to accommodate the latest holiday haul. It's not the sort of thing you can just jump into. There is a process involved. First, you can leave the new stuff all around the house for at least three weeks. It's still Christmas as long as you have the tree. A new sweater in the box on the corner of the couch, toys under the tree, boxes containing just the warranties for the electronic contents can be left anywhere. But then, it happens. The tree goes. There comes that day when the decorations get put away, the old sheet comes out. The tree, that ancient Teutonic pagan symbol of hope for an early spring, now a Christian symbol of a nice yeshiva boy born in October, lays across the old sheet and is wrapped and dragged from the house, without any fanfare, then laid on the side of the road like refuse. A gaping hole stares back at you from the corner of the living room. Dry nettles and tinsel lie around like the crumbled remains of ancient ruins. I don't care if you have a vacuum with enough suction to create a black hole in space, you will not get the last nettle until May.

With the tree goes all the excuses for not finding the new things a place to live. But your house was stuffied to the gills before Christmas. Now what? It's pruning time... the Christmas Closet Cleanout Spectacular has begun!

Pruning a closet is a vastly underated skill. You have to pull out each item and ask these questions: When will I need this? When was the last time I used this? What did I use this for? How depressed was I when I saw the infomercial for this product? If I spent a lot of money for it, never used it, never will use it, can I still leave it at the Goodies Section of the Shelter Island dump?

Clothing requires another set of questions: When will this fit me? When was the last time this fit me? Did this ever fit me? Will this fit me before it goes out of style? Will it fit me when it comes back in style? What are the chances I will ever desire to wear a color block blouse with one lime green breast and one burgundy one in this lifetime? Who can I give this to? Who would this fit? Will she still be my friend if I offer this to her?

Bags and bags of clothing, shoes, toys, and stuff in general are on their way to the Goodies Section even as you read this. A plethora of goods, old, very old, used and brand new, is on its way to the dump right now. And that is the way of life here. Wse recycle among ourselves. It's free shopping and the return policy is excellent. I have acquired many outfits from foraging about in dropped off shopping bags.

My favorite pants are a bright floral pattern pair in 3X, a great coup from the after Christmas Closet Cleanout Spectacular of 1999. These pants make my ass visible from half a mile away, in the dark or underwater. I can't believe someone threw them out! Well, all I can say is thank Gawd she threw out the matching top as well. I've always had a certain flair, a certain style. The big women on this Island who are given tasteless and garish clothing rely on me to pick up their slack. An expensive outfit, no matter how hideous, cannot be donated to charity because it's too good for that, it has to go to somebody, anybody who would find it attractive, someone who would actually wear it, even in public... and that's where I come in. And there is reciprocity, of course. I leave all the tasteful, pastel Martha Stewardesque things that I am given at the Goodies Section for whoever might like those hideous things. This is one of those "balances of life" things everyone talks about.

If you honestly can't part with it, we have a new blessing on the Island to save you. A rare and wonderful thing has happened here. It has been longed for for many years. I speak of storage... yes, I said the word...storage.... a storage business has opened on Shelter Island. The Andrews, Theresa and Bob, have opened a storage unit business. She is now known to me as St. Theresa of the Units. You can beg for a space if you call 749-1240, or email RVATRA@aol.com.

Once the closets, nooks, shelves and all your hiding places are pruned, you may enjoy them for at least one day. Just enjoy the "negative space." You will feel really feng shui-ed. You can reach into a closet and pull out only the thing you intended to get. Nothing else hits the floor.

Okay, you can have two days.

is fighting to preserve farmland and our rural heritage.

The new law went into effect on November 17. Last week, another neighbor of Serran-Pagan, completely disgusted by all these machinations created by the mayor, leased Serran-Pagan just over a half acre of land directly adjacent to the farm. A fence between the two properties would come down. Serran-Pagan would now have an amount of land exceeding the minimum required by the new law. Serran-Pagan could apply for his permit.

At one point during all of this, back in October, with the new law being drawn up, Serran-Pagan told me that he couldn't take it anymore. He was moving back to Spain. He didn't think what was going on here was something that could happen in America. I think this was the day sections of the new proposed law were made public, and one could see that "grandfathered" animals, those that had been on farms in the village prior to the time it was written, would not be exempt from its requirements and punishments. You can't do that in a new law. The constitution protects "grandfathered" properties. But they did it. And people would have to abide by the new law, remove any farm pets no matter how many years they'd been in their family.

I did suggest to Serran-Pagan that day that soon this would all be over and he could live in peace, and so far, anyway, he remains here. On the other hand, just after Christmas he was off on a trip to the Far East for awhile and during that time his property was being taken care of by a caretaker. It was at this point that I received a phone call from a woman named Jo-Elyn Vega.

"On Christmas eve," she told me, "I drove over to Serran-Pagan's farm about 3:30 in the afternoon. I knew he was away. But I had a six pack of Heineken with ribbons around the bottles that I wished to give to the caretaker there for Christmas. I drive a white van. Nothing unusual about it. I came up the driveway, past his mailbox with the red barn on it, and then up to the circle at the end of the driveway. I got out of the van, handed the Heineken to the young caretaker, wished him a Merry Christmas, then made a k-turn, backing up and turning around, to go back down the driveway. As I did, I saw a strange man with a video camera, standing on the other side of the hedge, where the mayor's father-in-law lives, and he was pointing it right at me.

"I don't think he expected me to do a k-turn. And I think he was surprised that I now saw him. The hedge is about six feet high. He was standing on something so that he was able to film over it — a big box, perhaps, or a ladder — and when he saw me, he immediately stopped, pulled the camera away and then stepped down and ran back to the house."

"What did he look like?" I asked.

"He had black hair slicked down. I would say he was in his late fifties. What went through my mind first was surprise at just how surprised he was. Obviously, he was hoping nobody would see what he was doing. My second thought was — is the caretaker over 21? Did I just give Heineken to a young man who is under the drinking age? Would they arrest me? My third thought was not a thought at all, but a feeling. I felt angry. This was a Peeping Tom. A spy. Someone who should have been ashamed of himself. People have the right to have some privacy at home. And by this time, I had driven up to Route 27 and was well on my own way home. My last thought was that I should have called the police on this man. I should have thought to do that while I was still there. But I had not. This is a disgrace."

These are the circumstances under which a homeowner in Southampton has to live his life. It seems to me there are a lot more important things for a mayor to attend to than to harassing a resident of the village because of some complaints given to him by a relative. That he continues to do this is a dishonor to the community.

The mayor's name is Joe Romanosky and his address is Mayor's Office, Southampton Village Hall, Main Street, Southampton, N.Y. 11968. I suggest if you feel the way I do about all this, you write him and tell him. You might also write the Suffolk County District Attorney's office at Hampton Road and Little Plains Road, Southampton, NY, 11968. These are the people who have legal oversight of the mayors of the villages in this county and to whom you should report mayoral malfeasance. •

DAME CLEO LAINE AT FEINSTEIN'S

Dame Cleo Laine and John Dankworth, two of Britain's greatest treasures, are doing their thing at Feinstein's at the Regency in NYC until Feb. 2. They are not to be missed. The Dame is like a fine wine and had the packed room on their feet cheering with delight. The evening I attended Liza Minnelli and Petula Clark were in the audience. Liza said she "got goose bumps". If you missed them at the Performing Arts Center in Westhampton in Sept., make sure you get over to Feinstein's.

review: mere mortals

By Jessica Romm

William Faulkner said of writing, "The aim of every artist is to arrest motion, which is life, by artificial means." This is true of all forms of writing and is illustrated most clearly when words are brought to life by actors on a stage playing to an attentive audience.

Friday was the opening night of Mere Mortals at Southampton College, which began a three-weekend run. I stress the word "run," because that is exactly what you feel the actors are doing. Mere Mortals is a sequence of one-act plays performed in black box format. A team of eighteen actors have so mastered their lines that the incredibly rapid pace of their dialogue is made to look easy. All of the plays are written by David Ives, author of the Off-Broadway hit All in the Timing. His work also appears in Francis Ford Coppola's Zoetrope: All Story and he has received the Guggenheim Fellowship in playwriting. Mere Mortals is under the direction of Michael Disher. The performance consists of three acts, each act a different short play highlighting the talents of student actors and local talent. The genre of the one act play provides a diverse experience for the actors and the audience. Much like short films or TV sitcoms, they do not require a long attention span. However, in Mere Mortals, the acts are packed with bursts of dialogue and the arch of the story rises and quickly falls before you know it. You are engaged immediately into the thick of the story, much like an episode of your favorite television show. Mere Mortals is an unfettered, Pinteresque performance in which the actors use the entire stage.

In a particularly strong performance led by fourth-year drama student Chelsea King, the actors recreate four David Mamet plays in less than fifteen minutes. This is an amusing take on the strong masculine language that Mamet uses in his writing and it highlights the purely American social musings of some of Mamet's earlier works. As one tries to follow this hysterical rant, it is almost as difficult for the audience as it appears to be for the actors. But one thing is obvious — everyone is having fun.

The pace of each act is quick and the audience has nothing to focus on but the words and movements of the actors. Black-box theater is a direct result of a number of experimental theater movements. It is minimal and challenges typical theatrical conventions and barriers between the cast and audience. It was developed partially as a reaction against the artistic confines of formal types of stage space. Because few props are used, each movement, expression, gesture, tone and pitch is amplified, making the performers concentrate on the delivery of their lines and the reactions of the audience. In a way, performances in black box format is theater in its purest form.

Ben Miller is the lighting designer and he embraces the beauty of the black box format. The sparse sets allow the lighting to take on a very important dimension in the performances, particularly in the first piece – Foreplay: Or the Art of the Fugue-set at a miniature golf course. The play is a collage of three separate dates of an incredibly pathetic character named Chuck. You see Chuck working to score some "action" by trying to appear intelligent as he describes golf as a metaphor for life. The lights from above follow the actors around the stage as they play forward on the golf course – and it's hilarious.

Some of the acts are intense dialogues between two people, and at other times such as in Degas, C'est Moi all the players make an appearance. Across the board, the actors deliver strong performances with rigor and wit. Under the direction of Michael Disher, these actors present an entertaining evening of laughter and entertainment.

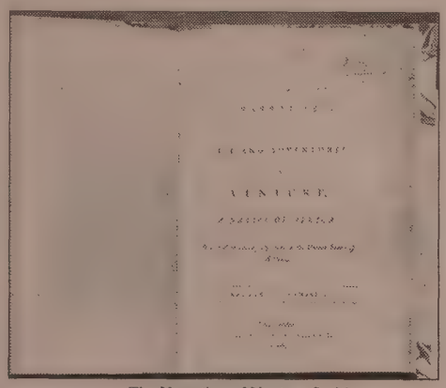
Next weekend at Southampton College, The Players with perform 2X4 on Friday and Saturday night at 7 p.m. 2X4 will feature the work of four different student writers chosen from the Masters Programs in writing and theater. Mere Mortals returns on February 1-2 for two evening performances. •

Dan's North Fork

The Life And Times Of "Venture" Smith: A Black Legend

By Joshua May

In the course of researching an article about black history on the North Fork I came upon the remarkable story of a slave who had spent much of his life on and around eastern Long Island during the mid to late eighteenth century. Sadly, his story is quite typical of many slaves, though his case is unique because he recorded his experience with the help of Elisha Niles, a schoolteacher and Revolutionary War veteran, who was from East Hampton. The story is "one of the very few slave narratives from the colonial period, and is especially prized for its depiction of slavery in New England and Long Island," according to archaeologist John Pfieffer. It provides a brief, but profound glimpse into one of the darkest corners of American history.



The Narrative of Venture Smith

The story begins with the recollection of his childhood in Africa when his name was Broteer. "I was born at Dukandarra, in Guinea, about the year 1729. My father's name was Saungin Furro, Prince of the tribe of Dukandarra. My father had three wives." Though polygamy was "not uncommon," it didn't always mean that the wives liked it. "The first thing I remember was a contention between my father and mother, on account of my father marrying his third wife without the consent of his first, which was contrary to custom. In consequence, my mother left her husband and country, and traveled away with her three children. I was then five years old."

About a year passed before Broteer's father summoned him home and, shortly after his return, an enemy tribe, "instigated by some white nation," attacked and killed his father and took Broteer prisoner. He was led on a long march to the coast where he and, ironically, his captors were held in a large fort and then sold to the slave ships waiting in the nearby harbor. "I was bought on board by one Robertson Mumford, steward of said vessel, for four gallons of rum and a piece of calico, and called VENTURE, on account of his having purchased me with his own private venture. Thus I came by my name."

Venture said little about the horror of the "middle passage," reporting only, "After an ordinary passage, except great mortality by the small pox, which broke out on board, we arrived at the island of Barbados. But when we reached it, there were found, out of the 260 that sailed from Africa, not more than 200 alive." Tragically, in the slave trade, that was a remarkably low number of slaves to lose over the course of the voyage to the New World. "Venture was one of a handful of slaves not sold to island plantation owners. He stayed with the ship on its return voyage to Rhode Island, and was then taken to Mumford's home on Fisher's Island, N.Y."

His residence on Fisher's Island marked the beginning of the only life that he would know for the next twenty years. "I was pretty much employed in the house, carding wool and other household business. I continued for some years, after which my master put me to work out of doors. After many proofs of my faithfulness and honesty, my master began to put great confidence in me. My behavior had as yet been submissive and obedient. I then began to have hard tasks imposed on me. These tasks I had to perform when only about nine years old." We will never know the horrors of such an existence and for Venture, this was only the beginning of his hardships.

"Some time after, I had another difficulty and oppression which was greater than any I had ever experienced since I came into this country. This was to serve two masters." Mumford's son had a penchant for countermanding the instructions that his father would give and the result would be that neither was satisfied and both would punish him. He became truly miserable under these conditions; the only recollection that seems to bring him any happiness is that of his marriage at the age of twenty-two to Meg, another slave owned by Mumford. But even this small piece of good in a life of misery wasn't enough.

After a scuttled escape attempt Mumford wanted nothing to do with Venture and he was soon sold to a Mr. Stanton of Connecticut. There he encountered the same problems as he had with Mumford. Sold for the third time to a Colonel Smith, it seemed that Venture had finally found a small bit of luck in an otherwise miserable existence.

Col. Smith "agreed that Venture could buy himself out of slavery. Venture spent the next four years hiring himself out to fish, farm, and split wood, all the while paying his master about one-fourth of his wages for the privilege of working." It wasn't too long before Venture had earned enough to buy his freedom. "Being thirty-six years old, I left Colonel Smith. My wife and children were yet in bondage. I spent my next four years on Long Island, working for various people. In these years, what wood I cut amounted to several

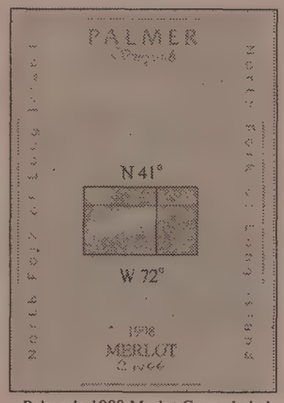
Putting Merlot "On The Map"

For those unfamiliar with the system of geometrical coordinates used in designating the location of places on earth, the label on Palmer Vineyard's new release, a 1998 Merlot Cuvee, may at first seem puzzling. The label, depicting a drawing of Long Island with the coordinates, N 41 degrees and W 72 degrees, actually represents the latitude and longitude of the island's North Fork. And it is clever and stylish. But the real news here is the contents: medium-bodied, user-friendly and, believe it or not, produced to price at between $7 and $9 a bottle.



Palmer's 1998 Merlot Cuvee Label

"This wine is meant for everyday consumption," said Palmer winemaker Tom Drozd, "and is of great quality for its price." He's right. Perfect with zesty Italian fare, burgers and pizza, the wine was aged in older oak barriques for twelve months before spending another twelve months in large oak casks.

"The somewhat longer than usual pre-bottle aging regime was used to facilitate its accessibility immediately upon release, and to soften and smooth out the wine," said Tom.

The merlot's back label wittily proclaims that these are "the coordinates for great merlot." Yes, indeed. Merlot is rapidly becoming the North Fork's signature grape, as lavishly illustrated by newcomer Raphael's nearly exclusive devotion to it.

"Becoming" the signature? "I've been saying that Long Island was made for merlot for years," said Eric Fry, winemaking legend at Lenz Winery since 1989. He should know. At the other end of the price spectrum from Palmer's new release, Lenz' 1997 Estate Merlot retails for $55. The wine is almost 100% merlot ("because merlot doesn't need help," said Eric wryly) with just a little cabernet sauvignon and a touch of cabernet franc for complexity. Its up-front richness is followed by a long, long, mouth-filling finish that just cries out for a perfectly grilled porterhouse. In a series of blind tastings conducted in New York, San Francisco and Paris, in which Eric hoped Lenz "would hold our own," the merlot repeatedly bested the famed Chateau Petrus (retail price for the 1997, which is sold out at Morrell & Company in Manhattan, was $595). Kind of puts that $55 in perspective, doesn't it?

Congrats to Peconic Bay Winery in Cutchogue, whose 1999 La Barrigue Chardonnay was awarded 88 points and "Highly Recommended" by the Beverage Tasting Institute in Chicago. "Peconic Bay's entry was the top New York wine, and fared well among the 131 American chardonnays entered," said Jim Trezise of the New York Wine & Grape Foundation in a recent issue of his newsletter, the Wine Press.

For the fifth time in six years, Paumanok Vineyards in Aquebogue has been honored by Bon Appetit magazine. Selected in 2001 as one of "the best of the year," Paumonk's 2000 Dry Riesling was the only wine on the east coast mentioned.

"We are delighted to be honored once again by Bon Appetit," said owner and winemaker Charles Massoud. "We have just sold out of the 2000 Dry Riesling (here at the winery), but it is still available in stores. The 2001 vintages promise to be of an equally high quality."

Among the winery's previous honors with the esteemed publication are its 1995 Merlot Grand Vintage (in 1999), its 1995 Chadonnay Grand Vintage (in 1998) and its 1995 Riesling Semi Dry (in 1997). Tres "Bon" Paumonok!

thousand cords, and the money which I earned I laid up carefully. I bought nothing which I did not absolutely want. Expensive gatherings of my mates I shunned, and all kinds of luxuries I was a stranger to."

As a free man, Venture adopted Col. Smith's last name and continued to work at odd jobs, fishing, lobstering, growing watermelons and other produce and splitting wood. Legend says that the massive man never raised the axe above his eyebrows because "Why would you want to chop air?" Venture said, "I worked at various places, and in particular on Ram Island, where I purchased Solomon and Cuff, two sons of mine, for two hundred dollars each." He was also happy to report that he was able to purchase his wife Meg, who at the time was pregnant.

He spent years on the East End, bought land and became quite prosperous before moving to his final home at Heddam Neck in Connecticut. As an old man, one of the most prosperous black men in all of New England with nearly 100 acres of land and three houses, he sat down with Elisha Niles and told his story. It was called A Narrative of the Life and Adventures of Venture, A Native of Africa: But Resident Above Sixty Years in the United State of America, Related by Himself, and it stands as a testament to this remarkable man and those horrific times.

CLASSIC CARS BY BOB GELBER

RACE CARS

I have a fairly extensive library of automotive books that I occasionally use for reference. The books in my possession range from a service manual for a Revcon motor home to the specifications and pictures of all the cars imported into America since 1946.

Recently, at the local town library I came upon a book that I had never seen before called American Racing. It was a large formatted coffee-table book. What impressed me most was that the book was chock full of archival photographs of the most charismatic and beautiful race cars of the 50s and 60s. As an aside, two famous Hamptons locals are in this book. John Weitz wrote comments about his driving adventures and there are pictures of the great and gracious Bob Grossman driving one of his many Ferrari race cars at the Bridgehampton Race Track. Over the years, I've considered it an honor to know both of these East End auto icons.

The 50s and 60s were certainly the golden age for automotive race car design. I'm not talking about engineering, but about pure grace and beauty in the body designs of these cars.

In studying the pictures carefully, I was struck by how rough and ready these cars appeared because as beautiful as they were, in the heat of battle, race cars do take a beating. Pictured in this book were, what are now mega-million dollar collector cars, with bashed fenders, taped on doors and unsightly wavy body repairs.

When I visited the Porsche factory several years ago, I was given a tour of the Porsche race car museum. All of the cars there were dirty, with aerodynamic speed lines of caked-up asphalt and dirt around the fender-wells and on their noses. They all looked like they had just been picked up by a helicopter from the Mulsanne Straight at Le Mans. I thought this was a very interesting presentation, certainly a lot different than the over-restored white glove cars we see here at American car shows and museums.

The pictures in this book have that same gritty photographic feel, which was as real as it gets. Race cars, my friends, when driven in anger, get dirty. In long distance races like Le Mans and Sebring, they actually get destroyed. Colin Chapman, probably the most famous

1955 Porsche 550 Spyder, and a closeup of its engine

Formula One race car designer of the era is quoted as saying, "The winningest race car should be designed to win the race and then fall apart after it crosses the finish line." He was referring to the lightweight of his Lotus racers, but the same can be true of any serious race car.

I owned a 1955 Porsche 550 Spyder and a 1967 Porsche 910 coupe that was converted to a Spyder. These cars were the most serious race cars built by the Porsche factory at that time, and they were built as lightweight as possible. The 550 was aluminum, but the aluminum was so thin you couldn't lean on any part of the car without denting it. (Coincidentally, my 550 was identical to the car in which James Dean was killed.)

The 910 was made of fiberglass draped and glued onto a spacious frame. The fiberglass was crude and thin and, in many places, unfinished. If you leaned on any part of the car, it would break. Although the bodywork on both of these cars was poor, the opposite was true of the engines and transmission. After all, this is what Porsche is famous for and one doesn't win races with running gear that is weak. But the Germans were certainly more involved with mechanical superiority than build quality on their race cars.

The same can't be said of the Italians. The aluminum Ferraris had hand-beaten one-off bodies but they were all magnificent. There was a touch of the great artistic car designer Pininfarina in every race car. If I was running hard and fast and saw a Ferrari snout getting bigger in my rear view mirror, I'd certainly know I would soon be passed. The same can be said of the Maseratis of that period. Along with the shape of the British D Type racing Jaguars, there has simply never been more attractive, brutish but beautiful racing cars.

Don't get me wrong, in a form follows function sort of way, the Porsche 550s, RSKs, 906,908 and 910 series of race cars were all very attractive machines. But when it comes to sheer beauty of line, they're wallflowers when compared with the sexy Italian machines.

Besides being the most beautiful cars ever built, vintage race cars of any type are the most valuable of collector cars. Because they represented the state of the automotive art when they were built, they are highly coveted by serious car collectors. As an added bonus, they're a blast to drive.

Shop 'til You Drop...With Maria Tennariello

Am I glad I did my shopping before it started snowing last Saturday? You bet I am. The shops were busy and I don't have to tell you how busy the food stores were. So let's do some (before the snow) shopping together.

Starting out this week in Hampton Bays, my daughter Michele and I stopped into Bar-Boy on Montauk Highway. Michele was counter stool shopping and I was checking out the sales. What a high-energy store this is, let's of positive energy flying around thanks to the store manager Jim and his associate Pete. They were so helpful, they completely energized us. Michele found great art deco counter stools, amongst a dozen or more on display, for her kitchen at only $38 each. What a deal. This store is for everyone and has just about everything from onion soup crocks to china platters, and some crystal stemware, attractive table service and flatware, for both residential and commercial. Of course there are the Viking and Garland stoves, faucets, juicers, coffee makers, cleaning supplies and much much more. Are you getting ready for your Super Bowl party, there is an entire room filled with party supplies also. Stop in; check it out, you won't be sorry.

Scotto's on Montauk Highway in Hampton Bays is the place to go for great Italian provisions. Great to go dishes, hearty soups and lunches, fresh pastas, sausage, cheeses, breads and more. Of course, we had lunch to go.

Nearby, Val's Closet has great designer clothing and accessories at very affordable prices. Love this shop.

Christopher Fischer Cashmere Collections is offering women's and men's home accessories at 50% off. Nice sale, don't you think?

Southampton's Touche located on Main Street in Southampton is having their winter clearance sale on shoes, handbags, sportswear and accessories at up to 60% off.

Also on Main Street at John Rogers Collection Outlet you will find great buys on handcrafted teak reproductions and eclectic new accessories for the home. Look for better deals on overstocks, factory seconds and special purchases.

On Jobs Lane in Southampton at Stevenson's Toys & Games (formally Lillywhites), there is some outdoor fun: Flexible Flyer snow sleds and inflatable snow sleds and tubes, model rockets-ready to fly and kits. For indoor fun, how about ping pong tables, (dart boards, Nok-Hockey, air hockey, jigsaw puzzles, models in plastic and wood and much more. The January sale is 50% all books (except Dover), Mme. Alexander, water globes, figurines, porcelain boxes, Muffy and Happy dolls and accessories. Great Valentine's gifts for that little love of your life.

Before I forget, White's of Montauk on the Plaza, is having their annual summer-winter clothing sale on men's, ladies and kids' swim wear, tops, shorts, shoes, pants, sweaters, hats and sweatshirts. A cool 50% off the above.

Don't forget that Schiavoni's IGA Market on Main Street in Sag Harbor has their "Wild Wednesdays of Winter" sale during January and February. If you spend $25 or more, your entire purchase is discounted (except cigs and lotto, of course), 10%, all day, all ages. Nice...Hey, a sale is a sale...

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Shopping!

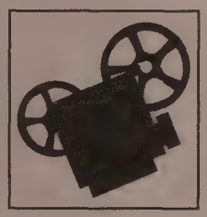
ED KOCH Goes To THE MOVIES

A Beautiful Mind (+) "ABCD" (-)

A BEAUTIFUL MIND (+)

This is a most unusual film. It's a little over two hours long and, about forty-five minutes into it, I wondered why it had received such acclaim. I thought there was something wrong with the movie and I was going to be a naysayer. Then suddenly, it all became clear. It's a splendid movie and you should definitely see it.

If I reveal too many details I'll spoil many of the film's surprises, so I'll just give the basic details. The story is based on the life of a brilliant mathematician John Nash. An insignificant and unsuccessful effort is made to explain his economic formula and other genius theories. John Nash (Russell Crowe) is a brilliant student at Princeton who upon graduation is hired to work at the Pentagon. He meets Alicia (Jennifer Connelly), a student in a class he teaches, and they marry.



From the moment we meet Nash, he is clearly different in speech, walk, interpersonal relations and ruminations. We learn he is overwhelmed by the apparent presence of others who are not there. He is psychotic and the balance of the film deals with how he is able to function while acting bizarrely. Many years later, he is ultimately rewarded with a Nobel Prize in economic science.

Connelly's acting is reminiscent of Teresa Wright from the 50s as the sweet, beautiful American girl next door, whose love and sacrifice will pull her husband through.

The acting is excellent on the part of everyone, including those who play cameo roles, like Ed Harris as government agent Parcher and Christopher Plummer as psychiatrist Dr. Rosen.

Some of the commentaries I read on the movie revealed that while much depicted about Nash's lifelong battle with schizophrenia is true, the film does not reveal other aspects of his life including his homosexual experiences while living with his wife. One person in particular, who complained about these omissions was Andrew Sullivan, former editor of The New Republic, who is now a militant critic with his own web site.

A Beautiful Mind is worth seeing if only to understand how real and painful mental illness is and the medical expenses involved. Our insurance policies treat mental illness differently than physical illnesses. Coverage for mental illness is often similar to dental coverage. Have you ever had a root canal and discovered how little most insurance companies pay toward the expense? I believe coverage is often worse for those in need of lifelong mental illness assistance. Senators Pete Domenici and Paul Wellstone are fighting for legislation in the U.S. Senate to make coverage for mental illness equal to that for a physical disability.

The shock of this film is what it means to suffer from schizophrenia — hearing and seeing people who do not exist and functioning professionally at the same time as John Nash did in real life.

"ABCD" (-)

Regrettably, this film in both script and acting is amateurish. As I was leaving the theater a member of the audience said, "Mayor, I hope you will give it a good review." I replied, "But it was so boring," to which he answered, "At least it had a story." That is what audiences want, but in this case, the story was too thin.

The title stands for American Born Confused Desi. Desi refers to young men and women of Indian extraction who disparage their cultural background. They prefer immediate and total assimilation and want to live in the American fast lane. The cast includes Raj (Faran Tahir) who is an accountant hoping for a promotion. His sister Nina (Sheetal Sheth) is in advertising and much faster in lifestyle than he. Both are hectored by their mother Anju (Madhur Jaffrey) to marry. Anju arranges a blind date for Nina with Ashok (Aasif Mandvi) just off the boat from India. Nina ultimately has to choose between Ashok and a white yuppie to whom she was once engaged. Raj has been engaged for two years and doesn't want to get married. How it all sorts out is a big yawn.

Before Ed Koch was a movie critic for Dan's Papers he was the Mayor of New York.

Guy de Fraumeni's HOLLYWOOD in The Hamptons

Black Hawk Down

Repeated screen appearances breed familiarity. Was that Cate Blanchett reaching for the same $3.49 a pound tomato as Roy Scheider in King Kullen? Wasn't that unshaven, skinny guy coming between them Billy Bob Thornton? Nope, that was my crack auto mechanic. If it had been Billy Bob and Cate, then Cate would have gotten the tomato. They're good old acting buddies and both have been in a lot of flicks lately. Cate's in the earnest WW II film Charlotte Gray and is, as always, shining in the otherwise gray movie. Billy Bob is electric as a racist prison guard in the rather brutal Monster's Ball. Then yesterday, I thought I saw Kevin Spacey bobbing in the ocean off Wainscott's Beach Lane. He was waving frantically. Poor fellow was shipped out and scuttled by The Shipping News. They should take care because familiarity breeds lassitude – if not contempt.

It's the familiarity of the faces of ravaged combat GI's that taunt me, rather than haunt me, in director Ridley Scott's, Black Hawk Down, The film visualizes the tragic events of the failed military mission in Somalia where the U.S. lost eighteen men in 1992. It's all those nice young actors seen in action recreating D-Day, Pearl Harbor and, more jingoistically, producer Jerry Bruckheimer's other very familiar wars.

We're moved by the nice faces of actors we know so well, but who were the characters they portrayed? And what about the 500 or so Somalians who perished attacking the Americans? Who were the thousands who hated us and why?

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer / writer / director of award winning European films and Network TV. He has judged the major Film and TV award competitions. He is assisted in this column by Sarah Halsey.

THEATRE

Hampton Theatre Company Casting Call for Of Mice and Men

John Steinbeck

The Hampton Theatre Company is holding open auditions for John Steinbeck's classic drama Of Mice and Men on Sunday, January 6, from 2 to 5 p.m. and Monday, January 7, from 7 to 10 p.m., at the John Drew Theater of Guild Hall in East Hampton.

Of Mice and Men is the powerful story of two roving farmhands in Depression-era California, of their loyalty to one another and its ultimate wrenching consequences. The play contains roles for nine men and one women. The characters are George Milton (30s-40s), a smart tough survivor as well as a kind loyal dreamer; Lennie Small (30s-40s), his big, strong gentle and simple-minded sidekick; Candy (50s-70s) an old broken farmhand who still dreams of a better life; the Boss (40s-50s), a tough but fair professional manager; Curley (20s-30s), the Boss's son, mean, insecure and pugnacious; Curley's wife (20s), pretty, lonely and flirtatious; Slim (30s-50s), a big, tall unflappable skinner; Carlson (30s-40s), a big-bellied and powerful worker; Whit (20s-50s), one of the guys; and Crooks (20s-50s), the only African-American worker, lonely and bitter.

Rehearsals for Of Mice and Men begin in late February with performances, at the John Drew Theater, running from April 11 to April 29 on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. James Ewing will direct. For further information, contact 726-4656.

ART COMMENTARY

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

THE ART SCENE: FAR FROM THE HAMPTONS PART III: SPAIN

Like Paris and the Cote d' Azur, the art scene in both Seville and Madrid presents obvious contrasts existing betwen urban and country settings. Not that Seville is a village like those that dot the Riviera. But its historic old-world demeanor is significant.

Taking the train from Madrid to Seville, we enter a different world altogether, where groves of olive trees and red poppies dot the gentle sloping hills.

While Seville's parks and "old town" are beautiful without being too commercial or overbearing, its La Cartuja (the 14th - century Carthusian monastery of Santa Maria de las Cuevas or St. Mary of the Caves) this critic remembers most vividly. Its long history as Christopher Columbus' burial site for thirty years and as a spiritual refuge for Philip II counterbalances its times of severe floods and a 1810 invasion by Napoleon's troops.

La Cartuja in Seville

The site is multifaceted due to its many functions. In 1841, the monastery became an earthenware and porcelain factory which existed until 1982. Thus, bottle-shaped chimneys exist alongside various chapels, prior cells, courtyards and a sacristy. Amidst all these many areas, contemporary art hangs on the walls in glorious splendor. The effect is surreal and incongruent.

What better place for a personal favorite: Andres Serrano's painting, "A History of Sex," featuring a young woman with bare breats standing beside a monk. There are also excellent works by Louise Bourgeois and Bill Viola (a video image of the sea shaped like an approaching tornado).

Back in Madrid, the Prado ovbiously offers a more classical and conventional venue. The Goya pieces are those that have most meaning for yours truly, along with the real life image of an artist, complete with paints and easel, copying a Goya painting.

Madrid's Reina (Queen) Sofia Museum serves as another contrast, a contemporary, comprehensive and well-organized venue with a glass, exterior elevator. Featuring this century's "Spanish historical avant - garde," the collection highlighted many outstanding works: for example, Picasso's "Guernica" and Dali's "Cenicitas."

Of particular interest, another collection exhibited works using manufactured products: those by the late Hamptons resident, Dan Flavin, and East End favorite, Donald Judd, were especially noteworthy.

It may sound like a cliche, but seeing familiar artists so far away from home is certainly an engaging experience.

–Marion Wolberg Weiss

Honoring the Artist: David Hewson

This week's cover artist, David Hewson, may hail from North Carolina, but he is a world traveler having worked in New York and Italy. His training in conservation also allowed him many skills and gave him world renown. Mr. Hewson's guilding technique combines a characteristic eloquence with the use of everyday objects that often have symbolic meaning.

Super Bowl XXXVI Planning

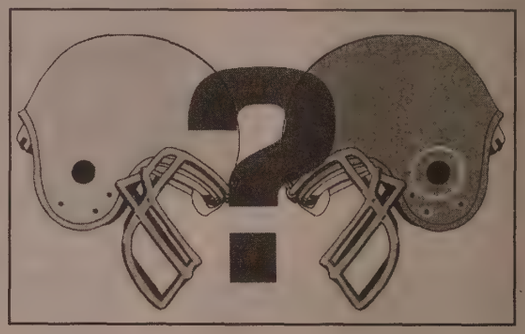
Male Chauvinist Pig-Skin

This is your mantra: Martha Stewart is the devil, Martha Stewart is the devil. You will not use any word longer than two syllables. Tablecloth ends are for wiping your mouth. Napkins are for wimps. The only fluid you consume will be made with malted barley and hops. You will consume large quantities of meat and nothing green. This is not Iron John naked drumming in the woods – this is Super Bowl Sunday. Men, this is the one day of the year that you have the God-given right, the absolute responsibility, to watch football and reverse 25,000 years of evolution in a single afternoon.

There are a bunch of web sites that give advice about how to plan the perfect Super Bowl party. A number of the web sites mention appropriate team-color streamers, a few others advise the purchase of cheese balls and crackers. Ignore these suggestions. The only decorations you should have in your house is the largest possible TV you can afford and a dead, fully-decorated Christmas Tree that you have not gotten around to getting rid of yet.

You should have a comfortable chair for yourself; if any of your buddies are coming over they can fend for themselves. If you have two comfortable chairs create a reward system so that whoever brings the most beer, subs, chips or money for you gets the other chair. This system works best if you don't have enough comfortable seats because then all your buddies will try and outdo each other and you should end up with plenty of food and beer.

Betting on the game is illegal, therefore you should definitely place a number of bets on your favorite team. It's advisable to bet a large sum of money on one team, say The Patriots, and then lay a side bet on the Rams – but not for money. Bet one of your buddies that if the Rams win, he'll have to wear your underwear on his head and run around the yard naked. This way, if you don't win your money bet, you will at least get to see your friend naked running around your lawn with your underwear on his head. When the police arrive, lock the door and claim that you don't know him. Halftime is the worst part of the game. It is, however, the perfect time to have the burping contest. This has two positive outcomes: First, you will re-affirm your manhood by belching loudly and aggressively. (It is not advisable to invite anyone to the party who can burp louder than you.) Second, it will help drown out the sound of N'SYNC, or whichever other awful boy band they have singing during the halftime show. The halftime show has actually been shown to cause severe stupidity in lab rats – this scientific finding shouldn't worry you.



Halftime is also the time to demonstrate your prowess in the realm of Super Bowl trivia. You don't have to know much to look like a guy who does nothing but watch football and drink beer. Simply log onto one of the web sites that have the bad party advice and memorize two or three questions. When your friends answer the questions wrong, berate them soundly and repeatedly. It is important to be the first to start the trivia so that after your friends answer your questions wrong you can ignore their questions. This is also a good time to go to the bathroom.

You'll notice that I have not mentioned women or children. That's because there are none at this party. It's even advisable not to have any men related to you at this party, unless they're bring food and beer, in which case they should definitely be allowed to attend.

This is important so pay attention: no women or children should be allowed to come to the party EVEN IF THEY ARE BRINGING FOOD AND BEER. No matter how much food and beer they bring, they should be turned away. (Note: "children" includes any female and any male under the age of twelve.)

There is only one exception to this rule: if the woman or women are sufficiently attractive and offer to wear bikinis and not drink any of the beer they can come to the party. If any woman asks to come to the party, tell her this rule. Then duck and cover. If you avoid getting hit, you will either have no women at your party or a woman in a bikini.

And remember: cavemen don't drink and drive.

silvia lehrer's cooking column

One Sunday morning I was chatting with my friend Inez Villa who is always ready to talk food. Inez, Neapolitan born, is simply a wonderful grandmotherly Italian cook. This day she was eager to tell me her tale of two soups. As she rattled off the ingredients, I remember repeating, "Oh I have that, and I have that, and so on. Her simple soup recipes comprised mostly of basic pantry items.

In a brilliant approach to her pasta and pea soup she uses the stems of the parsley, flat-leaf Italian of course, "which add a great deal of flavor to the soup," she says, and it does. Both the stems and leaves are used along with plum tomatoes, frozen peas, tubetti (tiny pasta), and chicken broth. While I tested the soup using chicken broth, there is such clarity of flavor in this recipe that I believe you could almost use water, if you like, instead of the broth.

You will want to purchase a fresh bunch of celery with crisp leaves, not exactly a kitchen staple, for her celery, potato and pasta soup. Broken pieces of tender spaghetti float in the broth along with diced potato and the pale inner leaves of celery.

These simple soups can bring order and imagination to your everyday life with food. Soups have staying power so head to the kitchen and whip up a couple of soups — they take the edge of the appetite and you may just lose a few pounds along the way.

PASTA AND PEA SOUP

The stems of Italian parsley are used to give additional flavor to this simple soup.
Serves 6

2 tablespoons olive oil
1 onion, finely chopped
2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
Handful parsley stems, cut into fine pieces
3-4 plum tomatoes, peeled, seeded and diced
4 cups chicken broth, homemade or fat-free, low-sodium
1/2 package frozen tiny peas (Petit Pois)
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
2 cups cooked tubetti or other small pasta, about 1/3 pound
3-4 tablespoons chopped flat leaf Italian parsley

1. Warm oil in a saucepan and put in the chopped onion, garlic and parsley stems. Stir to mix and saute for about two minutes. Add the tomatoes, broth and peas and bring to a boil. If using low-sodium broth be judicious about adding salt (it will need some however, about 2 teaspoons or to taste) and freshly ground pepper. Adjust heat and simmer with cover ajar, maintaining a lazy surface bubble for twenty to twenty-five minutes.
2. Meanwhile, in a separate saucepan, cook the pasta in salted boiling water to cover for seven to eight minutes until al dente or until firm to the bite. Drain and cool under cold running water to stop the cooking. About three to four minutes before soup is ready put in the cooked pasta and the parsley and stir to mix. Can be prepared ahead and reheated before serving. Serve hot in warm soup bowls.

CELERY, POTATO AND PASTA SOUP

Celery may still be enjoyed as a crudite, but I prefer it cooked, especially in soups. The pale inner leaves make a flavorful garnish.
Serves 6-8

1 bunch celery, with leaves
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 onion, finely chopped
2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
1/8-1/4 teaspoon dried red pepper flakes
5 1/2 cups chicken broth, homemade or fat-free low-sodium
1 large Yukon Gold potato, about 1/2 pound, cut into small dice
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
1/2 pound spaghetti, broken into 2-3 inch pieces
Reserved yellow celery leaves, coarsely chopped

1. Cut off the leafy ends of the celery and peel the large outer ribs. Trim the base of each rib and discard. Rinse well and pat dry. Reserve the crisp yellow leaves from the innermost ribs. Slice each rib in half lengthwise then thinly slice across.

2. Warm oil in a large saucepan and put in the celery, onion, garlic and pepper flakes. Toss to coat. Cover vegetables with a square of wax paper then cover saucepan to sweat the vegetables for six to seven minutes. Remove cover and discard wax paper.

3. Pour over broth and add the diced potatoes. Season with salt and pepper to taste and stir to mix. Maintain a lazy surface bubble over medium heat, and simmer with cover ajar for twenty to twenty-five minutes.

4. Meanwhile, in a separate saucepan, cook the pasta in salted boiling water to cover for seven to eight minutes until al dente or firm to the bite. Drain and refresh under cool running water to stop the cooking. About three to four minutes before soup is ready put in the cooked pasta and reserved celery leaves and stir to mix. Can be prepared ahead and reheated before serving.

5. Serve hot in warm soup bowls.

Dining IN THE HAMPTONS

Side Dish
By Aji Jones

Chef Paul del Favero is settling in nicely to his new role as executive chef at the Maidstone Arms. He's offering some great prix fixes right now too. There's dinner and a movie for $35, which includes a three-course prix fixe and a movie ticket. There's also a three-course prix fixe for $29. Both specials are available Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Sunday all night and Saturday from 5:30 to 7 p.m. You can also get a three-course lunch prix fixe Wednesday through Sunday from 12 to 2:30 p.m for $19.50. So head over there and sample Paul's terrific cuisine.

Here's another great deal (winter in the Hamptons does have its perks, right?) George Martin in Southampton is offering a special three-course prix fixe nightly. For $23.95 diners choose an appetizer, entrée and dessert. The special menu is offered Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Sunday all night and Friday and Saturday from 5 to 7 p.m. George Martin is currently open six days a week: Tuesday – Thursday 5 to 10 p.m.; Friday and Saturday 5 to 11 p.m. and Sunday brunch from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. and dinner from 5 to 9 p.m.

If healthier living was on your New Year's resolution list pay a visit to Barbara Layton at Babette's. They've just announced new hours for the winter season: Friday, 10 a.m.-10 p.m., Saturday, 9 a.m.-10 p.m and Sunday , 9 a.m.- 4 p.m. Creative chef and co-owner Daniel Van Deer Beek is still offering a $26.95 three-course prix fixe dinner menu on Fridays and Saturdays. Babette's recently hosted Robert Alvarez, former senior policy adviser to the U.S. department of energy. Alvarez discussed terrorism and nuclear power plants and a community plan of action against health and safety risks. Proceeds went to STAR.

Here's a sure cure for the winter blahs: 75 Main is having "sushi night" on Friday nights, courtesy of sushi chef Steven Biscari-Amaral. They've got a prix fixe for $24.95 which includes miso soup with tofu & scallions, Asian vegetable salad with ginger-lemon dressing, and a chef's sushi assortment. It's available from 6:30 to 9 p.m.

Speaking of sushi, ladies drink free at the bar at Pacific East on Friday nights from 7p.m. to 1 a.m. Their $19.95 prix fixe menu is also available on Friday nights (as well as Sunday and Thursday nights). The prix fixe menu is pretty extensive — chef Michael Castino's offerings include Peking duck eggroll and Bangkok fish cake appetizers. Entrees include cilantro crusted Montauk fluke and a sushi assortment.

Got a hole in your social calendar on Tuesdays at 5 a.m.? Well, you're in luck. The East End's new hometown cooking show, "Joseph Plays with Food," will be airing on LTV channel 70 during this time slot starting February 5. And if you're busy on Tuesdays at 5 a.m., don't despair: the same show will also air the following Friday at 8:30 p.m. and Saturday at 1:30 p.m. The first show, airing February 5, 8 & 9 will feature Sal Rizzo preparing mignonette of cinnamon venison with a blackberry chutney. Rizzo is coordinator of the Italian Culinary Institute which publishes the magazine Italian cooking and living, or, "La Cucina Italiana" Food personality and chef Joe Ciminera "plays" host.

Speaking of Italian food, have you been to Rubi Red lately? Their brick oven is jumping....in January no less! They're open for dinner Tuesdays through Sundays from 5-11 p.m. and they also serve lunch on the weekends. The cozy bar has live music on Friday nights and there's a happy hour every day from 5-7 p.m.

The dish hears that....

Actor Cliff Robertson was spotted noshing on a swordfish chop and a bottle of St. Innocent Pinot Noir at the Plaza Café in Southampton.

About Face.....with Annette

In my last column I addressed a quick look for fair to medium skin tones and I heard about it from all the darker tones. There isn't much difference in the overall application, just the colors and depth you create. I think this would look great on all those blondes that have dark eyes, like the Sandra Dee look. She had that great blonde innocent look, but boy those eyes said more! I love that combination. Although, today the hair is highlighted and blocked in different shades of blonde, the principles remain the same.

The following look is dewy and fresh, so make sure you use moisturizer and lip conditioner to prime your face before applying your makeup. This looks great on olive and deep skin tones!

Step 1:

Dot and blend small amount of cream foundation onto the skin, and blend it with the fingers. Keep the application very sheer. If your skin is in good shape, use just a bit of foundation to cover any small imperfections and skip the overall application. If needed, follow with a little concealer under the eyes and blend well. Don't use powder to set the foundation.

Step 2:

Before you begin the eyes, apply a light layer of foundation over the entire lid, which will act as a base coat for the shadow. Brush a little excess powder over the eye only to catch fallout from the powder shadows. This should be brushed away when the eye makeup is complete.

Step 3:

Apply a layer of a light, shimmery cream eye shadow from the brow bone down to the lash line, blending well with your fingers. Cover this with a dusting of facial powder. The powder will help set the cream shadow and enable you to apply powder shadow on top of the cream. Using a small to medium eye contour brush, apply a neutral beige shadow to the crease for added depth and contour.

Step 4:

Curl lashes. Then apply numerous coats of black mascara to upper lashes only. For more definition, use a liner brush and "smudge" a little black shadow on the outermost corner of the lash line, top and bottom.

Step 5:

Using an eyebrow pencil, lightly fill in the brows as needed. In choosing a brow pencil color, go at least four shades lighter than your hair color, so the color always looks soft and the brow isn't too severe. Blend the color, and groom the brows using a bristle brow brush.

Step 6:

For glowing cheeks, use a cream blush in a warm rosy shade. Use your fingertips to dot blush onto the apples of the cheeks and blend back toward the hairline, keeping the edges very soft. Cream blush can be heavily pigmented, so start light and build until you get the desired color and effect.

Step7:

Line the lips with a neutral taupe lip liner. On the inside of the lip, apply light shimmering gloss.

I don't usually "do" weddings, but I did one this weekend for a client/friend. I was amazed at how calm and cool Nicki was. She had managed to pull everything together starting a year ago. Wow, I have never been booked that far in advance! But everything from start to finish was in perfect order. So what do I have to gripe about? Well, for starters, in the fall she decided to get a perm. Why-oh-why do gals decide to this kind of thing so close to the big day? Ok, it was in the fall, but it takes the hair some time to grow into it. You can count on half an inch a month. It was overdone, cooked, fried, however you want to put it. She has spent the last few months conditioning it like crazy. On top of that she colors her hair. When I saw her the day of the wedding, it didn't look all that bad, but it was dry and the ends were crimpy. In spite of all the conditioning, which by the way, can have the opposite effect, it can turn the hair to a limp mush of noodles. Lucky for her, it hadn't. I knew a curling iron would have added insult to injury, so I resorted to the old standby we used on shoots: the steam-heated rollers. It worked wonders on Nicki's hair, it smoothed it so that we were able to work with it rather than compete with it. This case was rare and it, like the rest of her plans, went off without a hitch, no pun intended. Well, ok, maybe.

Ladies, please remember, don't switch hairdressers a few months before your wedding or other big event. Choose a good one, perhaps one you have been used to and stick with them. They will know your hair better than you; they will have your shapings and color down to a science. Choose them well in advance. Have a backup plan "just in case." The same should apply to your makeup artist. Plan to visit them for a tryout at least once before your event. Don't go buying over the counter acne preparations to correct skin, see a dermatologist. Try out a few preparations. If you have any redness or birthmarks, get a good corrective makeup and setting powder, like Dermablend. Usually there are tiny veins around the nose and these can be covered up with this product. And if you have several openings in your ears from multiple piercings, and if you aren't going to fill them with studs, make sure you cover them also. If you don't, you will surely see them in the photos! And don't forget, powder those ears! Shiny ears are fine for everyday, but to a camera, they will look just plain old greasy!

Have a great week!

Book Review: Organizing The Good (And Healthy) Life

This is the time of year when New Year's resolutions begin to slip. The bold plans made for self-improvement begin to slide back into old ways and the creature of habit rears its ugly head and once more takes control. The good intentions are doomed to wait for another eleven months to pass before once again asserting themselves at the start of another New Year. It's an interesting paradox, despite all the self-help books on the market and their prominent positions on The New York Times bestseller list.

Author and businesswoman, Celia Rocks has made an offering to the world of self-help with her book Organizing the Good Life, which tends toward the genre's style of self-analysis and "Oprahisms," but there are a handful of worthwhile nuggets of wisdom that redeem the work. By looking past phrases like "happy-making," "joyful simplicity" and the endlessly italicized main points, there is light at the end of the tunnel.

The book is driven by Rocks' personal life and the transformation that she underwent from "spendaholic to doyenne of the good life." Debt and disorganization were the dogs nipping at her heels and she ends the first chapter with the admonishment that "important lifestyle change takes time" and that she will employ a literary device popular in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries in which the narrator assumes the role of teacher. A small cast of characters are then used to raise relevant issues and questions, which can then be answered. The technique is actually quite effective for delivering this type of information and it helps to limit the amount of self-referencing Oprahisms (see, even I'm guilty of the offense) to a minimum, though they are most assuredly present. Each chapter of the book is summarized neatly under the headline "If you've been paying attention, honey, here is what I hope you got." If you take the section about organizing and controlling your time to heart, you can simply read these sections and save yourself time.

With the introduction out of the way, Rocks launches into a carefully regimented dissection of life and how to prioritize and make effective changes. The second chapter, entitled "Show up: it's 80% of everything" is not a terribly radical notion; in fact, it has been repeated numerous times by a variety of people with little difference other than the percentage that showing up accounts for. Rocks twists the old axiom, which generally has been applied to business dealings, to encompass familial and social relationships. She asserts that "showing up" need not be a personal, face to face encounter all of the time and that a phone call or a note can be substituted in a pinch.

She moves on to ethics, an arena in which she urges complete truth and honesty because of the effect this will have on those around you. "Respect is something that you can't buy at any price," she writes, "It counts big." Certainly a sentiment that some folks at Enron and Arthur Andersen would have done well to take to heart. Now that you're there and being honest, Rocks moves on to the penultimate self-help device of figuring out what is really important in your life. A redeeming feature of this section is that it offers a few suggestions about how to go about this process, which is helpful because people who don't know what is important generally do not know how to determine what is important and too many self-help books miss that point.

The usual topics follow: ridding your life of clutter, focusing on quality, delegating responsibility, developing a healthy relationship with money and so on. Each of these issues is tweaked with a new vision of the eternal sentiment and there are a few worthwhile tips interspersed throughout the work. A workbook section in the back of the book is provided to correspond with each chapter and a complete bibliography is provided for further reading, titles include: Life's Little Instruction Book, A Return to Love and 1,001 Ways to Market Your Book.

The book closes with a quote by Kahil Gibran: "Yes, there is a nirvana; it is leading your sheep to a green pasture, and in putting your child to sleep, and in writing the last line of your poem." The sentiments are those expressed in the book, certainly more succinctly and sweetly, but the directions aren't as explicit in the poem as they are in the book. Rocks' book is by no means a radical revision of life and how it should be lived. It stands, instead, as a helpful guide that may clear a bit of the clutter, bring a few important issues to the fore and help reveal the path to the pasture. –Joshua May

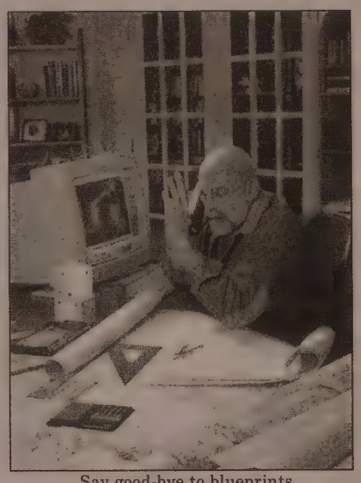
Interior & EXTERIOR

Virtually Home, Sweet Home

Would the piano look better in the north corner of the living room facing the fireplace or in the south corner of the room facing the entrance? How about the rose bushes out front; is it better to have yellow or red roses, or perhaps tulips would look better there? Would the roof on the new addition look better with gables or skylights? Decisions, decisions. It wasn't so long ago that these questions were resolved with a bit of imagination, a couple of drawings and some trial and error. But today, through the magic of technology, it is possible to design an entire home or garden without planting a single bulb, moving a single piece of furniture or lifting a hammer.

Interior decorators, architects and builders have been using design software for years to render images of projects before they were undertaken. Prior to investing huge sums of money into a project, the software gave them the means to go beyond blueprints or drawings to show a client what his project would look like when completed. Until recently, the problem was that the software, though very practical for design purposes, was too costly and complex for average homeowners to use when planning their homes. An additional problem was that affordable software was not useful and the quality of the product left much to be desired.



Say good-bye to blueprints

Today, the software is remarkably affordable, easy to use and it renders high-quality 3D images that allow for virtual tours of the proposed changes. It makes sense to employ this resource when contemplating home improvements to ensure that they really are improvements. And it can be fun to give your house a makeover without a visit to the paint store.

There are a number of software packages on the market that enable a homeowner to make virtual plans and the following, myHouse, is merely one product highlighted to provide some sense of the options available. It will allow you to see your kitchen with custom cabinets and an island, reorganize your bedroom or any other room, plan an addition, second or third story or layout the house of your dreams.

One great feature of these programs is that the technical aspects of the project are factored into the software, so all you have to do is point and click your choices and provide dimensions. myHouse, like other programs, has libraries of columns, windows, half walls, garage doors, skylights, wallpapers, hardwoods, shingle patterns and roofs, which will automatically scale to the dimensions you provide. The placement and style of stairs is simply a matter of choosing from the wide ranging selection and, if nothing suits your fancy, the program will help you generate your own designs with their templates or from scratch.

If a total remodeling is not in the cards then myHouse can help you select furniture, either from its library or you can create your own designs. Fabric textures and lighting effects can be reproduced so that you can get an idea what the new couch will look like at night or if the new bedspread will look good against the gray rug in the morning.

Once you have provided the program with the requisite information, the real fun begins. The myHouse software will convert the information into a 3D representation that you can walk through virtually. Walk into your new bathroom and look up or down, left or right, from any angle and see how the changes look.

myHouse will also allow you to create a 3D movie of your home so that you can get the feeling of walking through your new design. By selecting the route you will take through the house, your camera angles and how long to spend in each room you can create the effect of walking from the kitchen into the living room, opening the hall closet, heading upstairs to the kid's rooms and down the hall to the master bath. If you like them, great, if not, go back and make changes to the plan. All before you ever call a contractor.

And when you do decide to call a builder, the software allows you to create a "Bill of Materials" spreadsheet that will help you track the elements of the design. Instantly see how many and what type of windows you've chosen, the number of chairs that will fit in the living room and combine this information with local price quotes to estimate the costs of your project.

There are a number of software packages available that provide these features, some of which are tailored more towards design and others which focus on landscaping and interior decorating. Shop around to see which program will best suit your needs. At the bargain prices that this software is offered, it makes far more sense than moving the piano back and forth in the living room.

Guess Who's Coming To Breakfast?

Although many people think that all birds fly south for the winter, the months of January and February are full of opportunities to interact with our flying friends. People may pack away their bird seed and guide books until the warmer spring months, but that would mean missing out on some very unique birds that inhabit the East End in winter months.

If you definitely want to see some activity in winter, your best bet is to get a bird feeder. I spent some time speaking to Bruce Horwith, the owner of Wildbird Crossing in Bridgehampton, about what a novice bird feeder like me could do to attract local species to my backyard.

What I found was that there are many options when it comes to bird feeders. There are also certain protocols that, when followed, will result in many species dining on your seed offerings and living happily and well-fed in the trees of your backyard.

The two most popular feeder foods are black oil sunflower and safflower seed. Safflower is popular because pest birds, such as those beautiful, shiny but pesty black birds, called grackles, stay away from it. It is more expensive, but the theory is that you will go through less while only feeding our (more desirable!) songbirds, such as cardinals, chickadees, titmice and bluejays. This theory is basically true but there always seem to be a few stubborn grackles that are willing to choke down anything, even pricey safflower. Still, the effort and expense are worth it if they are really a problem.

Hulled sunflower is a great choice if avoiding a mess is a priority as there is simply no waste to fall to the ground. This is an ideal choice for patios and decks and also for sharing your bird feeding efforts with your friends and houseguests without the need for constant cleaning. Again, this seed costs more, but you get more for your money. Compare it to buying peanuts in the shell as opposed to out: the edible portion of the latter is about 40% higher. The same is true of hulled sunflower.

Hopper feeders are a good choice for winter because they have platforms for birds to perch on and they don't need to be filled as often because they hold more seed, a real benefit in cold, wintry weather. Many birds enjoy this sort of "luxurious" feeder because it gives them a place to rest and socialize as they consume, two things they are much more inclined toward in winter months.

Another feeder option to consider is a suet feeder, which is usually a wire box filled with suet – an animal fat protein cake. Wrens, chickadees and woodpeckers – including the magnificent red-bellied woodpecker that everyone always confuses with the rarer red-headed variety – are attracted to this type of bird feeder.

Goldfinch feeders are extremely popular on the East End because, in the spring, goldfinch take on a brilliant yellow color. So if you start attracting these birds now during the winter months when they are a drabber brown color, in the spring your backyard will be filled with lovely sun-colored birds. Finch feeders take nyjer seed, which is also known as thistle. And while squirrels can be a big problem at feeders, as anyone who has fed birds knows, they don't care for thistle and generally leave it alone.

Speaking of squirrels, one way to solve the bullying problem is by putting up multiple feeders in your backyard. Something for everyone! While the squirrels won't go away, they are territorial and will force out interlopers. The notion that they will appear in herds at your feeder is just untrue, unless, maybe, during a real blizzard. Still, it sometimes feels like even one or two can eat you out of hopper and home.

Now available at Wildbird Crossing is a fun, new novelty item called Wax Snax, which is a jar of 100% whole roasted waxworms. We may think ugh! But many of feathered friends will be attracted to this treat. It is also a good item for people who like to change the types of food that they put in their feeders. Wax Snax are high energy, protein rich foods that are attractive to warblers, chickadees, wrens, titmice, robins, orioles and mockingbirds, species that do not usually eat seed.

Winter birds to watch for in this area are chickadees, nuthatch, titmice, bluejays, cardinals, woodpeckers, house sparrows, starlings, crows, white throated sparrows, house finch and juncos, otherwise known as snow birds.

While you're enjoying those beautiful winter visitors, remember, this spring, to look for hummingbird feeders, many of which are quite beautiful and hold a sugar-water mix. Get these up by the end of April for the best chances of attracting the ruby-throat, our only East End variety.

POLICE BLOTTER

Westhampton Village Police responded to a Jagger Lane resident's complaint last week. The man told police he was cutting down a tree in his yard with a chainsaw when his neighbor came outside yelling and grabbed the dangerous machine out of his hands. The lumberjack was able to turn the saw off before anyone was hurt, but the lumber jerk managed to punch him in the neck in the process. Police made no arrests concerning this dispute.

A few miles east in Hampton Bays, Southampton Town Police arrived to aid a woman on Argonne Road. She told responding officers that she was out for a walk when a black vehicle passed and an egg was thrown, hitting her in the face and causing a bruise on her neck. With limited information, police are still searching for the eggers.

Some people say, "The grass is always greener on the other side of the fence." Well, touché, it wasn't so for a Maidstone Park Road resident who called police when he discovered the theft of some fencing from his property. Five of the seven sections had been installed but were taken down and, along with two other sections, were removed from his property. Police have no leads to the would-be fencer but are still investigating.

* * *

If you're worried about someone stealing from your property, don't bother garaging your goods; they just might steal your garage instead. This was the case for a Little Neck Path resident in Water Mill last week. He told police that sometime between January 7 and last Saturday his $600 Cover-it canvas garage was broken down and taken from his yard.

A 20-year-old Southampton man was arrested January 11 at the Green Derby on County Road 39 in Southampton after assaulting a 21-year-old Southampton College student. Police reports say the victim went to use the bathroom as the under-aged assailant followed. Once inside, the college student was punched in the head and neck. Police were called and, upon arrival, arrested the attacker and charged him with harassment in the second degree.

A sketchy story was drawn up by town police in a report last week. The incident began in Bridgehampton as a Huntington Crossway resident was returning home. She called police after a black 1989 Cadillac blocked the road so she couldn't pass as it appeared the drive was selling drugs to a pedestrian. Officers who responded to the woman's call pulled the Cadillac over on the Bridgehampton-Sag Harbor Turnpike, at which time the drug-dealing driver fled on foot to a nearby Huntington Crossway residence as police followed. In attempts to arrest the 20-year-old Southampton resident, one officer was punched in the face several times. Police finally subdued the man and found crack cocaine and marijuana on his person. He was arrested and charged with felony criminal possession of a controlled substance in the fourth degree, assault in the second degree, misdemeanor resisting arrest, unlawful possession of marijuana and various traffic violations.

20-year-old Mattie Pearl of Roosevelt caused a situation at the Bridgehampton Kmart's self check-out that resulted in her self check-in at overnight lock up. Ms. Pearl was observed leaving the store with two shopping carts full of merchandise including electronics and bathroom products that totaled $1,832. She was arrested and charged with grand larceny.

The L-I-double-R was probably thinking "H-E-double hockey sticks!" early last Sunday morning. Police officers in East Hampton had to send a Hicksville repair crew to the railroad crossings of four different streets in East Hampton. The were found stuck in the down position, but were eventually erected.

And finally, Riverhead Town Police made a series of arrests last week that culminated in one man being arrested three times in four days under the same charges. The 19-year-old man of Second Street in Wading River was arrested once last Monday, once last Wednesday and again the following Thursday each time for possession of marijuana. I commend all local police officers for their persistence in fighting crime.

Dan's LETTERS

WANTED: ONE COMPASS
Dear Dan,

"The sun sank, seemingly on schedule, into the ocean in the traditional green flash, and then darkness, as they say, descended."

Huh?

"Personally, I am worried about a seven minute change in the sunset and a nearly six-day lag in the solstice, in just one year."

I feel your pain, Dan, but personally, I'm more concerned with the alarming news that the sun now sets in the East, over "the ocean." What? Is there a different sun up here on the North Fork? One that sets in the west? Over the, you know, ocean? The Pacific Ocean? Or, more dear to our hearts, the Sound? You know, when you're looking.....WEST? What are you talking about Dan?

Barbara Ann

The sun sets over the ocean on the South Fork from late November to late January.

TO MAYOR, OR NOT TO MAYOR?
Dear Dan,

As a resident of Southampton Village I am very disturbed about the story on "Mayor" and Serran-Pagan. My first question is why do we even have a mayor? The second: doesn't he have more important issues to tend to rather than going after Serran-Pagan?

If it is not too late, is there anyway we can support Gines Serran-Pagan?

A concerned resident,

AS THE FLAG FLIES
Dear Dan,

While reading your article on the correct way to display the flag, I was particularly interested in the part about whose flag flies above the Stars and Stripes.

About two years ago I sent you a picture I thought would be of interest to your paper. It shows the way the flag is displayed in the village of Southampton.

I guess before the events of September 11, not too many people noticed or cared how the flag was displayed.

Once again I am enclosing the same photo. If any one cares to see for themselves, just walk west on Jobs Lane and look up, you can still see it today.

Maybe you, as a reporter, can find out why the town chooses to display the flag in violation of the US Flag Code.

When I made inquiries I was told that on that type of flagpole, this was a place of honor. According to your story this is not one of the two exceptions.
